

Invitation

The Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung Budapest, within the framework of its regional programme called "Gender equality in East-Central Europe", in co-operation with the Departments of Political Science and Gender Studies at CEU, cordially invites you to a conference on

The recent Austrian presidential and Dutch parliamentary elections, and the upcoming presidential election in France challenge our notions of "Europe as we know it." The rise of "illiberal democracies", of populist right wing and far right parties and paramilitary groups in Europe and beyond invite us to look beyond symptoms and think about the root causes. We would like to address the issue what the consideration of the gender dimension can contribute to a deeper understanding of these root causes.

How can we distinguish between these actors, where is the borderline between conservative, populist right, far right and illiberal actors and discourses? Is the cleavage right/left still relevant, or are there new cleavages emerging? What is the concept of these political actors about men and women and gender policy, and how do they use them for mobilization in Europe? What characterises women who are mobilized as voters or party activists? What is the role of female leaders? Are there connections between challenges of representative democracy, the neoliberal, gendered economic order in Europe and the rise of these parties/ movements and the women in them?

We kindly invite you, on the occasion of the publication of the book "Gender and Far Right Politics in Europe" to discuss these and other related questions, together with experts from Austria, France, Germany, Poland, Slovakia and Hungary.
